MARCH 1954

NUMBER 152

Plans for a new revolving door and a more open and inviting entrance to the Art Museum made necessary the removal of two stone columns just inside the Art Museum's front door.

The columns, each weighing approximately 2½ tons presented a hazardous problem of removal which was completed without mishap.

MEMBERS—THE MUSEUM'S CORNERSTONE

The Members of the Art Museum are the cornerstone of the institution and its good works.

A few days after its incorporation in 1901, one hundred and thirty ladies and gentlemen assembled in public meeting, signed their names to the Articles of Incorporation, paid their dues, and thus became Charter Members of The Toledo Museum of Art.

For fifteen years the Members were the sole—and at times slender—support of the Art Museum. Then, in 1918, an endowment was raised; and ten years later, by bequest, Edward Drummond Libbey provided handsomely for the future of art education and enjoyment in Toledo.

Then, as now, the annual dues of Members have been of vital help in maintaining and expanding the educational program of the Art Museum. You are needed despite the gifts of Arthur J. Secor, the bequests of Florence Scott Libbey, Nettie Poe Ketcham, Clarence Brown and others.

This year the Museum has its largest membership since the days before the Depression—this is partly due to the generous gift by the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company of one hundred memberships to their employees. It is also partly due to the growing interest in art which is manifest not in Toledo alone, but all over the country.

Last year, in New York, 3,712,000 tickets were sold to baseball games; 3,428,000 was the attendance at Museums of Art, and three times that number at Museums of all types. Two years earlier the number of tickets to Symphony Concerts sold throughout the country surpassed that sold to baseball games.

Toledo has long led the procession toward a more cultivated and enlightened populace. For many years our Art Museum has had the greatest attendance in proportion to population of any city save the national capital. Its record of interest in the paintings from Berlin and the Art Treasures from Vienna was phenomenal.

The public response to the Berlin exhibition was of material aid in making it possible to bring the Vienna one to Toledo. Both records of public response to art helped to secure the Van Gogh paintings. The turnout of Museum Members and their guests—1300 strong—was a tribute to the artist and an impressive demonstration to our visitors from afar. Only a few more came out for the opening in Philadelphia, a few less for that in St. Louis.

We, who have the day-to-day problems of running the Art Museum, are appreciative of our Members—of their loyal support, of their cash contributions, and of the demonstrations of interest and enthusiasm which they have so often given.

During the Eighteenth Dynasty (1580-1350 B.C.) in Egypt, cosmetic dishes of steatite or soapstone were made in many animal and fish shapes—this one shows a bound oryx antelope. A shallow depression on the reverse held rouge or perfumed ointment. The delicate realism and softly modulated green and blue glaze are characteristic of Egyptian work at this time, when a rebirth of the arts was inspired by a brief period of religious reformation.

In Holland the winters are damp; the low, gray sky presses close to the land, and there is little temptation to leave ones home. In the seventeenth century, even more than today, people rejoiced in the rare occasions when the canals threading the countryside became frozen over. Everyone took to skates or just strolled about enjoying the crisp air. Vendors of food and drink added to the holiday spirit with their booths and tents. Isaac van Ostade (1621-1649) observed scenes like Skaters Near a Village around Haarlem, the town where he spent his short life. The fine condition of this signed panel makes it an especially valuable representative of a 'little master' among our Dutch pictures.

This necklace of moulded glass came from a tomb near Athens of the Mycenaean Period (1400-1200 B.C.). The rosette motif may have been influenced by Cretan goldsmith's work. Originally the rosettes were a deep translucent blue and the connecting links, green. Disintegration by chemicals in the soil has transformed the glass to opaque paste and the surface to a soft egg-shell texture.

An Early Christian silver cross, found on the banks of the Orontes River in Syria, was made in the sixth or seventh century. It was probably intended for use on an altar, as the small tongue at the bottom was inserted into a base. The simple but elegant shape is only relieved by two New Testament inscriptions which have been cut into the metal, the letters filled with niello, a paste of various sulfides which turns black and hard with firing.

Early Ohio glass, featured in a comprehensive exhibition honoring Ohio's Sesqui-centennial, included fine examples made at Zanesville, Mantua and Kent, Ohio, from 1815 to 1840. Four representative pieces: an amber swirl-ribbed bowl; a diamond-moulded chestnut flask; an amethyst vertical ribbed footed bowl; and a large cornflower blue flip glass were acquired for the Museum's glass collection.
